Preface.

Any one who opens this book can see at a glance that the making of this CONCORDANCE required much time and work, a great part of which was done at home, in the evening hours. To render those who use it less critical and more willing to overlook the shortcomings and deficiencies of this book, let me, in the first place, describe how it has been prepared.

When, a few years ago, I was asked to prepare a concordance to our hymn-book, I went through the entire book, underlining each word that I deemed of sufficient importance to merit a place in the CONCORDANCE. When I was through, I had underlined about 39,300 words. The following days and weeks I underscored some more in my mind whenever I read or sang a hymn. Then I received word that the hymn-book would be revised, and, of course, my work was in vain. When I finally received the revised edition, I had to begin anew. Next the 39,000 words had to be written on small slips of paper. This was done on the typewriter by a clerk of Concordia Publishing House. At the same time the number and stanza of each hymn where the word was to be found were recorded. To arrange these 39,000 slips alphabetically was a work of many days. The printing of a single word, however, would do little good; so it was necessary to find in what connection the word had been used. Now followed the most tedious part of my work, which covered a number of weeks. This was to look up each word again in the hymn-book and add one or more explanatory words.

Looking up more than 39,000 words in the hymn-book, finding the word in question, and writing down the context, which in many cases necessitated careful reading of two, three, or more lines of the stanza, seemed such a big job that the undersigned, who is always very busy, thought it nearly impossible at the time to undertake it. The adding of the subject or object seemed to be sufficient and, of course, this perhaps could be done by some one else. However, I soon found that the subject or object in many cases is on the following or on the previous line, e. g., "The graves restore," No. 553, 1. On the next line you find the object of restore: "the dead." Look up No. 212, 1, "Opened when our Savior died," and see where the subject of "opened" is.

In adding explanatory words, it also seemed preferable to add such words as were to be found in the same line. Take the two lines of hymn 548, 1: —

Over distant mountains breaking,
Comes the redd'ning dawn of day.

In this sentence the subject "dawn of day" is found on the second line, and it is only a waste of space to mention it under "Mountains" in the first line, because a person having the second line in mind naturally would look for it under "Dawn" or "Reddening" or "Day." As explanatory words to "Mountains" we therefore would select the adjective "distant" or part of the prepositional phrase "Over distant."

As the adding of the subject or object was unsatisfactory, I gave the advice just to write down the whole line of the stanza in which the word appeared, so that I could select the words which seemed most suitable myself. This was done, and it was of great service. In the first place, the numbers of the hymns and stanzas were verified and errors corrected, something that had to be done anyway. We now had 39,000 slips without an error in numbers. It seemed to us that the CONCORDANCE would be 100 per cent. perfect at least in this respect. In the second place, it was a great help to me. I had only to read each line and underscore the words which should go into the manuscript.

However, the whole matter was not as easy as it seemed. The sentence "He [Christ] comes from the thickest films of vice," No. 139, 3, first showed me that I could not rely on the words of one line. Furthermore, many lines made no sense at all, e. g., "Hath Thee, O Savior, cost," No. 197, 5. "Soul and body, would restore me," No. 65, 10. "Spend my life, I never could," No. 316, 4. Even when the words on the slip were sufficient and quite plain, I feared I would not always get the right connection of the word, and so I had to look up again the greater part myself anyhow.

After the words which should be added had been underlined, the manuscript had to be typewritten. This was done by my secretary. Now came the work of reading over the manuscript. Many, many an evening I sat at home comparing the entire manuscript with the 39,000 slips. The errors made in typewriting were very few; but in many instances the whole arrangement of a word did not suit me. Arranging 320 slips with the word "life" and a line of the stanza on them is difficult, as one has no general view of the whole arrangement. Now I had it all before me on a few pages and saw how much better it could be arranged. Consequently about half of our 830 pages were retyped. A pastor experiences the same thing sometimes when, upon rereading his sermon, he decides to change it altogether. There is, however, a danger of making errors when one rewrites so many thousands of figures. Now already I have given up all hope of a 100-per-cent. perfection in this respect. What a glorious feeling it was when at last our work was completed!

It is not always easy to add some explanatory words. If we wanted to keep our book within the limit of 200 pages, — but we did not quite succeed in doing so, — we could, on an average, use only about three words to show the connection of each of the 39,000 key-words. Frequently the use of only one word was sufficient; in other cases a few words were necessary; e. g.: —

What God doth in His Law demand
No man to Him can render. 314, 2.

How many words were required to give the necessary complement in each case of the key-word "Render"? Or take the following example (No. 164, 6): —

Nor leave us till at close of life,
Safe from all perils, toil, and strife,
Heaven shall enfold and hide us.

Just which words would you choose for the explanation under "Perils"? Since we had made the rule of preferring words on the same line, we would say: "Safe from," or we would put it under the "And" group "Toil," "Strife."

It was not our aim to give the full meaning of a sentence or clause, but only enough words to enable the reader to recall to his mind the phrase or clause for which he is looking. Even if the words used give no sense at all the way they stand, as in the example above: "Safe from," the context will be supplied by the pastor who is looking for that particular phrase. If you have in mind the line "Safe from all perils, toil, and strife" and you find in the CONCORDANCE, under "Perils," the words "Safe from," you know that you have found what you wanted.

We have tried the usefulness of the CONCORDANCE repeatedly and asked others to find a given line. In a great number of cases it took only twenty seconds. Of course, if a person wants to find a stanza under such key-words as "Life," "Love," "Heaven," it will take more time, because one has to go over two or more pages. Some lines of the hymns are very difficult to find. You may even have in mind a phrase which you cannot find in the CONCORDANCE at all. This may be either a defect of the CONCORDANCE or a slip of our memory. We may look for a line in the hymn-book which is not there at all, but in some other book. There are cases in which even the best concordances give us no information.

As to the question whether this book should be a word index or a topical index, we should like to say this: —

If you were using the CONCORDANCE as a word index, you would have a certain word or group of words from your hymn-book in mind. For example, you were thinking of the line "My heart in lowliness abounds" and wanted to know in which hymn it was to be found. You had in mind the word "abounds" (not abound*ed*, abound*ing*, or abound*eth*). The word "abound" in its different forms appears in the CONCORDANCE thirteen times, the word "abounds" only twice; so it would be much easier to find the hymn you wanted by having each form listed separately. Likewise, if you were thinking of "adored," you would not have to look over all fifty-four places where "adore" appears, but only over the sixteen where "adored" is to be found. When looking for a word in the singular number, you would find it unnecessary to go through the words in the plural. Thus by making a word index, we gave the reader every form of the word which appears in the hymn-book.

If the CONCORDANCE was to serve as a topical index, the circumstances would be quite different. You would want to find a hymn expressing a certain thought. For example, let us say you were thinking of the fact that the Lord watches over us, and you wished to find a hymn or stanza where this thought is expressed. Since in this case the different forms of the word do not make any difference, the endings are omitted, the key-words "Watched," "Watching," "Watchful," and "Watcheth," disappear, and only the word "Watch" or "Watchfulness" is used. Likewise "Redeemed," "Redeemer," "Redeemer's," "Redeem," "Redeeming," and "Redemption" would all be placed under "Redemption." We would also omit the irregular verbal forms, such as gone, went, fought, wrote, felt, etc. Thus it is seen that the CONCORDANCE could not be a combination of both, a word index and a topical index, without harm to the one or the other. Either (as topical index) we would lose sight of the endings so important in finding a line, or (as word index) the same thought may be found under three, four, or more words, each with a different ending or form.

Would most pastors be likely to use the CONCORDANCE as a word index or as a topical index? Such pastors as are not well acquainted with the English hymn-book and its contents would naturally use it only as a topical index. However, such pastors as have used the English hymn-book for many years and are acquainted with most of the hymns would use it mostly as a word index. As this CONCORDANCE was designed to serve also the needs of the future, we considered it best to make it a word index. However, the CONCORDANCE can be used also as topical index, as has been illustrated above, by consulting every form of the word; e. g., if you have in mind a description of the curse and consequences of sin, look up the key-words "Sin," "Sinned," "Sinner," "Sinner's," "Sinners," "Sinning," and you have all there is in the hymn-book on this subject.

Arrangement of the Contents. — The arrangement of the contents is either alphabetical or logical. The following is an example of an alphabetical arrangement under the word "Sacred": Day: We hail 129, 1. 5. (On this 256, 1. When first was poured 177, 1. Wonders of this 250, 1.) Feast 429, 1. Gifts 270, 3. Head 211, 3. 214, 1. Hours 124, 3. Joy 78, 1. Love 302, 3. (Flame of 255, 1. Love's — art 349, 7.) Name 102, 5. Etc. The first word under sacred is "Day." In order not to disturb the alphabetical arrangement of the words under "Sacred," the words that have been used for further completion and explanation of "Day" are enclosed in parentheses. Under "Love" there is the same arrangement.

In some cases the logical arrangement was used, as under the word "Angel." Here the first word used is "create"; then come the different offices of the angels: "adore," "praise," "sing," and how they serve mankind: "near us," "wardeth off each hurt," "bear me home." Under "Wake" we first speak of waking from sleep, secondly, of the waking of the soul, and, lastly, the waking on the Last Day. The word "Turn" has been grouped according to the subject; first, where God is the subject; secondly, where the subject is man: turning to God, turning from, etc. Groups are separated by two small vertical lines.

For the use of this CONCORDANCE we give the following suggestions: —

a. This book is arranged alphabetically, and therefore the words must be looked for in their alphabetical order. The different forms of a word have not been placed together. "Went" is to be found under W, not under "Go," "Wrought" not under "Work," etc.

b. If, when having a line of a certain stanza in mind, you look for it under a word that appears but a few times, you will find it much more readily than if you take a word that is used frequently. For example, if you were looking for "boundlessness of love," you would find it much sooner under the word

"Boundlessness" than under "Love," which fills several pages. "Bread from heaven" could be found quicker under "Bread" than under "Heaven."

c. If you have in mind a noun with an adjective, e. g., "eternal throne," look for the group "Adj.:" under the word "Throne."

d. Sometimes a word may belong to more than one group of words, e. g., "Prince of eternal peace" may be listed under the group of the preposition "of" and also under the group of "Adj." To save space, we have listed it only once.

e. If you have a group of nouns, verbs, or adjectives in mind, e. g., "Sin and fear," or "Satan and sin," or "Adore and bow," look for the group "And:" under the word. "And:" means that two or more words are joined by and. The "and" group is, as a rule, placed at the end of a word.

f. The dash has been used to represent the first word of each new division; so when reading, that word should be read in its place, for example under "Day": "The pomp of —— is gone" should be read, "The pomp of day is gone."

g. Similar groups of words, especially prepositional phrases, have been so arranged that the same word or preposition does not have to be repeated, but, instead, it is placed at the beginning, in bold-face type. Instead of writing: Spirit of adoption, of grace, of life, of power, of salvation, we write it thus: Of: adoption — grace — life — salvation. Another example: Under "Heaven" we do not write: Bread from heaven; Bread of life from heaven; Blessed food from heaven; New life from heaven, etc., but, From: Bread of life — Blessed food — New life, etc.

Owing to the fact that our hymns are poetry, written in metrical form and not in prose, expressions frequently occur that make the reading and understanding of a sentence difficult. Then, too, many hymns are translations, and the words do not always flow as smoothly as in the original. In translating, it is not always possible to reproduce both the language and the beauty of the original hymn. Similar instances are also to be found in the German hymns; but still these hymns are dear to us because we have learned them at school in our childhood days, and we love them as old acquaintances.

Let us also to-day give our children an opportunity to learn, and become acquainted with, their English hymns, so that in later years they may possess a good hymnic treasure. When opportunity offers, the pastor should not fail to embody some of the beautiful stanzas in his sermon. We hope therefore that this CONCORDANCE will be of real service to our pastors in finding appropriate hymns for their sermons, as this is one of its chief aims, a close second being the selection of the most appropriate songs to be sung by the congregation in various services. May this CONCORDANCE also be of benefit to our teachers, Sunday-school teachers, and our lay members.

In going over the hymn-book as painstakingly as the work on this CONCORDANCE necessitated, we were forcibly impressed by the fact that it embraces all the doctrines usually found in Christian dogmatics.

Dare we express the hope that our humble efforts may prove instrumental in somewhat enlarging the users' range of acquaintance with the wealth of contents of our hymn-book, to the blessing of man and the greater glory of God?
